Authors: Ceily Green, Ethan Nichols, Yining Deng, Joseph Nwachukwu

Problem Statement:

- As a college student, it can be hard to keep track of all your friends' schedules and know when they are in or out of class.

Who is experiencing this problem?

- College or high school students finding difficulty with scheduling plans with their friends

What is the problem?

- Having the “fear of missing out” due to a lack of communication among friends along with constant time conflicts.

Where does the problem present itself?

- This problem is most present on college campuses due to classes occurring sporadically rather than a consistent, uniform schedule.

Why does it matter?

- Spending time with friends and meeting new people is one of the best ways to make the most out of one's college experience. The ability to “ping” a friend when your schedules align could make all the difference.
